

USA

DEBBIE GOFF, Infectious Disease Specialist Pharmacist, The Ohio State University Wexner Medical Center, USA

Contributing to a global PPS is a valuable opportunity for stewardship programs. The ability to get a snapshot of antibiotic use from your own hospital and compare the findings to other hospitals empowers the stewardship team to make meaningful change in their hospital. On the day of the PPS, the stewardship team will collaborate with many other healthcare providers to assist in data collection. The camaraderie generated by the participants is invaluable and each person feels like they are contributing to a bigger cause. Participation in the PPS contributes to the global stewardship mission. I feel it is very important plus you get to work with international experts.